Council to review Planning's decision to let Lexus occupy Infiniti properties

Six hours into a marathon meeting, the Planning Commission voted unanimously December 10 to grant Jim Falk Lexus access to three properties on Olympic Boulevard currently occupied by Infiniti of Beverly Hills.

Vice Mayor John Mirisch, the only councilmember who lives in the southeast part of the city, later called up the Commission's decision, meaning the City Council will review the determination at their meeting early next week.

"[The Planning Commission] is a kangaroo commission," said attorney David Peyman, who also lives in the area. "They have zero interest in resident concerns, they have zero interest in understanding the issue and they have zero interest in doing the right thing. They are only interested in advancing the developers' agendas."

Earlier this year, a group of southeast residents, which included Peyman, filed numerous declarations under penalty of perjury against Infiniti following several violations, from speeding cars to noise disturbances to allegations of harassment by Infiniti employees.

In August, they submitted the information to the city prosecutor, who was supposed to get back to them by the end of October, but did not respond to their submission until late December.

Under a conditional use permit (CUP) authorized by the Planning Commission in 2013, Infiniti has been using the property located at 9031 Olympic Boulevard as a vehicle servicing facility.

The car dealership occupies two other plots along the major thoroughfare: 9000 Olympic, which functions as a car-wash facility, and 9001 Olympic. Prior to being occupied by Lexus, the property at 9000 Olympic would be leased back to Infiniti for three years.

If the plan is backed by the Council, Lexus will transfer its service operations at 194 Robertson Boulevard to the building on Olympic. The car dealership would also occupy Infiniti's other two Olympic locations.

At next week's Council meeting, Mirisch is expected to require that predefined consequences for each violation be set in place before Lexus moves in.

"So that we don't find ourselves in the same situation," Peyman said.

Attorney and former Mayor Tom Levyn, who represents Lexus, said he was under pressure from the automaker's corporate offices to make a decision that night.

"Lexus corporate has said either I obtain approval tonight or we go ahead with the construction on Wilshire and Maple," Levyn said. "But we have to do something; we can't keep putting this off."

The Council previously granted Lexus an entitlement to expand its franchise.

As outlined in the staff report, the property located at 9001 Olympic functions as the reception point for vehicles requiring service. Lexus would take over the space and use it for the same purpose. Service hours would run from 7:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. on weekdays and 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Saturdays.

The CUP amendment may have received the Commission's unanimous support, but only after a lengthy and heated discussion that starred Peyman and Southeast Task Force member Susan Mishler.

"In truth, Lexus has never been a good neighbor in the last seven years," Mishler said.

The luxury auto dealer has had a location on the corner of Wilshire Boulevard and South Maple Drive for many years.

"I'm concerned about Lexus actually servicing more cars than Infiniti," said Commission Chair Alan Robert Block.

Nobody attended the meeting on behalf of Infiniti. The automaker has 17 years left on a 20-year lease.

"The [Planning] Commission is not competent or capable of actually making a fair determination of that CUP," Peyman said.

Fine Art Commission makes progress on Kusama restoration, fencing

The Fine Art Commission's consideration of fencing options for Yayoi Kusama's "Hymn of Life: Tulips" sculpture has been a lengthy and multi-layered process.

On December 17, the Commission accepted a bid from Master Ironworks for a 19-post, stainless steel fence with a $40,000 price tag. An additional $7,500 will be tacked on for concrete footings.

"You can build a fence for substantially less money," Commission Vice Chair Alan Kaye pointed out.

Kaye, who voted against the project, said he would support a $25,000 enclosure instead. But his colleagues seemed intent on wrapping up the process, which has exceeded a year.

"I'm willing to give this a shot, I think that [the City Council] wants this done as much as we do," Commission Chair Brenda Potter said.

Though tasked with acquiring art, the Fine Art Commission often spends a substantial portion of its monthly meetings deliberating maintenance procedures for the city's public art.

In November, Potter said, "The one task we are supposed to be doing is finding art for the city—I agree all of this is important, but the real duty of this Commission is to find art."

The $47,500 fence being proposed for Kusama's polka-dotted, fiberglass tulips will replace the bright green construction that currently encircles the sculptures.

Commissioners later approved a contract with Rosa Lowinger & Associates, a conservation firm that specializes in the preservation of sculptures and contemporary art.

A report prepared by Senior Conservators Christina Varvi and Rosa Lowinger mentions "hairline cracks" throughout each of the tulips—"especially at the leaves, where it appears that people may have stepped on them while climbing the structures."

Later on, Community Services Assistant Director Nancy Hunt-Coffey portended a glum future for Kusama's vibrant trio of tulips.

"If we do end up back in this situation in a couple of years, I think we're going to have to really consider something drastically different, like maybe moving the piece indoors," Hunt-Coffey said. "I don't think any of us knows what the future will hold."

Architectural Commission OKs changes to new restaurant building

At their December 16th meeting, the Architectural Commission approved modifications to a commercial building located at 9960 South Santa Monica Boulevard with a 4-1 vote. Commissioner Barry Bernstein dissented.

"This building is going to be here for a long time and the equipment could have been redesigned," Bernstein said.

The numerous modifications requested included painting the stucco walls white; bringing four agave plants to the entry courtyard; adding four stainless steel mesh pendant lights to the open-air dining area; and bringing wall-mounted façade illumination to the entry courtyard and rear elevation.

Built in 1951, the structure will house Nerano, an upcoming Italian restaurant that promises 1,400 square feet of dining and bar space.

As stated in the staff report, the city's Urban Design team concluded that the proposed façade remodel "will maintain the overall form and scale of the existing building while introducing a high-quality aesthetic to the streetscape of South Santa Monica Boulevard."

The Planning Commission reviewed the project in November and granted property owner Jane and Marc Nathanson Family Trust 34 in-lieu parking spaces, as well as an extended hours permit and an open air dining permit for 10 tables and five chairs.

Phil Savenick on the Wallis' upcoming History of Beverly Hills screening

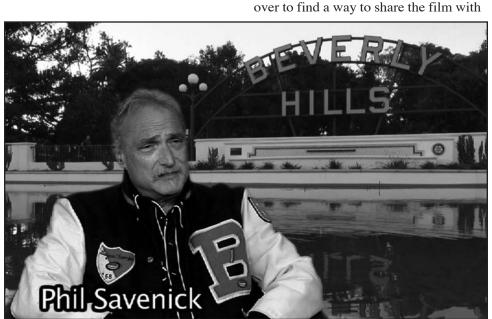

The History of Beverly Hills: 100 Years, 100 Stories will screen at the Wallis Annenberg Center's Bram Goldsmith Theater on January 7 at 7:30 pm. Directed and produced by the Beverly Hills Historical Society's Phil Savenick, the documentary offers an inside look of life in Beverly Hills from the Rancho Days to the 21st century.

What do you hope to accomplish with next week's Wallis screening?

I am hoping that the premiere of The History of Beverly Hills: 100 Years, 100 Stories is the kind of great community event that brings us all together to celebrate our civic pride. History is made by people, and our story is told in the recollections of hundreds of Beverly Hills residents who were the eyewitnesses to our history. The people of Beverly Hills are the real stars. We'll journey back in a time machine to the days when cowgirls and Indians roamed our hills and movie stars lived on every block. Afterward, hopefully we can all get together on the terrace and reminisce about the magical experience of living in this amazing community.

What's the greatest challenge you faced in producing the documentary?

We recorded the memories of over 150 current and former residents of Beverly Hills. With the help of my friends like Robbie Anderson and Marc Wanamaker of the Beverly Hills Historical Society, we set out to collect every still photograph, movie and video shot in the city over the last 100 years. In the end, I had over 300 hours of material to choose from. Hundreds of great stories didn't make this version, but perhaps in the future. The greatest challenge was to pick just 90 minutes of the best of the best. As the editor, my challenge was to cut short pieces of each resident's recollections as if they were brushstrokes to paint a collective picture of our past 100 years.

After the documentary was complete, you asked the city to sign over the rights to you. Why?

Not quite accurate. The production was started before the centennial and was ready for its debut January 28, 2014—on our birthday. My intention was always to make an educational documentary that told the simple truth

Tell us what the feedback's been like.

that our town is more than just three blocks of shops on Rodeo. Some former city employees had a different vision that this was something they could commercially exploit. I resisted.

Since no money had changed hands, the city never owned any stake in the production. I merely asked them to void

a contract I would never sign andstart

The City Council has been extremely supportive for the last several years and when we hit a roadblock as to paying for a premiere to celebrate our local "stars," councilmembers Lili Bosse and Nancy Krasne volunteered to pick up the costs. The public response has always been rewarding. We ran about 10 hours of footage during six months of special events the Beverly Hills Historical Society threw during our Centennial Summer at Roxbury Park. Several hundred showed up for each event, which included a film festival, book signings and a tribute to beloved teachers.

What's the future of the documentary?

I licensed two hours of special history segments to BHTV that they are free to run. These include tributes to Harold Lloyd, Will Rogers, Robinson Gardens, as well as segments on the racetrack, the home front during WWII and "hometown heroes" that honor our parents and grandparents who founded and built this town. Many segments are already posted on Vimeo, and I am meeting with my old classmate [BHUSD Superintendent] Steve Kessler about working segments into the curriculum in the schools. The Beverly Hills Historical Society is hoping to set up a station at the library so residents can watch individual interviews or the final shows and we hope to someday give visitors smartphone access to the films in the parks. The film is available for civic organizations to show in many different configurations. We created a world class data base of our history.

Why did you make this film?

I made this film to honor our founders, pioneers and visionaries. We stand on their shoulders. It honors the people who brought us to this paradise. Not only my parents—former mayor Ben [Norton] (who was instrumental in the design of the Civic Center) and former Planning Commissioner Rose Norton—but also all the other individuals who have given their time and talents to help make Beverly Hills great.

I am hoping it has the vibe of the Centennial event I helped produce at the Fox/Saban in 2014. We all felt like a community. It was a glorious moment. Let's do it again.

The Wallis premiere on January 7th is already overbooked, confirmation numbers will be sent to those who RSVP'd. Self-pay parking is available at the 450 N. Crescent garage under the theater, or is free at the library lot.

BHPD arrests armed auto burglary suspects

The Beverly Hills Police Department arrested auto burglary suspects Ivan Sanchez, Freddy Landaverde, Rosa Castillo and Mayara Castillo on December 21.

At approximately 1:30 a.m. that morning, officers on routine patrol approached two subjects in the 300 block South Elm/Rexford alley. The individuals attempted to discard a metal, lock-pick-type tool by concealing it behind a utility pole.

Additional back-up officers later located a vehicle in the alley that had been burglarized and ransacked. Officers then discovered two other suspects in the area.

One of the suspects was armed with a loaded semi-automatic handgun. All four suspects were taken into custody for a variety of charges, including burglary and possession of narcotics and forgery.

The victim's property was recovered and returned to the owner.

Drought poses challenges and opportunities

By Sen. Ben Allen

Obviously, we are in the grip of an epic drought. The snow pack in the Sierra, which is the source of nearly 60% of California's fresh water, is lower than it's been for this time of year since the state began taking measurements 100years ago.

This is a very serious drought that I believe offers an opportunity for us to rethink our relationship to our water resources, and look beyond short-term fixes to permanent solutions that not only help us weather the current crisis, but ensure we are prepared for the next one.

Earlier this year, the State Water Resources Control Board issued an order requiring local communities to reduce water use by 25%. This is the first time any state water agency has taken such action. As a result, in August, Californians reduced water use by nearly 27%. We did even better in July, with statewide conservation rates exceeding 31%. Hitting these targets puts the state on track to meeting its goal of saving 1.2 million acre-feet of water by February 2016.

Local water agencies also have taken bold action to improve water conservation and shift where water comes from. For example, the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power has committed to cut reliance on imported water by nearly 50% by 2025. They will make up that amount with local supplies and cleaned up groundwater. This alone will position Southern California to be much more drought resilient, and better able to absorb the future effects of climate change. But clearly more needs to be done.

As the rain begins to fall, especially if we experience the kind of El Nino year we've been promised, I fear it will be all too easy to forget that a dry California is a normal California. Even in heavy rain years, we must plan for longer droughts in the future and more fluctuation in our precipitation patterns. We should not assume this drought is the exception to the rule. Rather, we should accept that it is the norm.

So we must find ways to live within our limits, and to ride out the age-old fluctuations of dry and wet. Some have suggested that if only we had more dams and desalination plants, our water troubles would be solved. But these "solutions" whole problem simply by telling people that their lawns and gardens must go brown, or that almond growers should let their orchards wither and die.

The drought policies the state has developed have tried to balance the needs of all while pushing for conservation where gains can be made. The path to a more sustainable water future that enables our economy to grow and allows us to preserve our quality of life will require finding that balance.

Since 1970, the Los Angeles area has managed to cut its bottom water use and still grow by one million residents. Over the past year, through conservation, capture, and other methods, other communities have lowered water usage up to 25% through simple, cheap measures such as reducing the duration of showers or sprinklers and the frequency of toilet flushing.

Many cities have installed the infrastructure of catch basins, pipes and filtration tanks to hold and clean the water they already used. But the vast majority of all that recycled water ends up going not onto our lawns and gardens, parks and golf courses, but right into the ocean. In fact, we continue to allow the equivalent of a river's flow—hundreds of thousands of acre feet each year—to drain into the Pacific. There is enormous potential to capture this treated wastewater and reuse it.

Experts say our state could reuse up to 1.8 million acre-feet of water each year. This is a significant amount considering that a recent report by the state Department of Water Resources found that our groundwater aquifers are being over-drafted by nearly 2 million acre-feet per year during this drought.

It is clear that many of the solutions are right in front of us – and they don't have to break the bank.

Recently, the Legislature and the Governor took steps to help mitigate the impacts of the drought. This past spring, we passed a series of drought funding bills to invest in water efficiency, drought response, flood control projects as well as food assistance and emergency water funding. This followed on the heels of 2014 legislation to support drought relief, which included money for communities impacted by the drought, and bond funds for projects including conservation, water recycling, groundwater contamination cleanup, and storm water management.

I am honored to serve on the Senate's Natural Resources and Water Committee, where we have the opportunity to shape how these policies evolve. I am looking forward to using this post to ensure we continue to make progress towards a sustainable water future.

If we do our jobs right, our children's children will live in a much different world than we do now. Not one of scarcity and drought, but one of balance, reuse, and efficiency. We are on the brink of a fundamental shift and that is very exciting.
