

Beverly Hills' quality of life is being threatened!

The Beverly Hills Police Department is in crisis! The longest serving Captain recently settled his lawsuit for discrimination against the City for $2.3 million dollars! Attempts to address workplace problems and avoid lawsuits that could cost Beverly Hills taxpayers millions of dollars more have gone unheeded.

Twenty-two employees of all ages, ethnicities, religions, ranks and sexual orientation have filed lawsuits or made complaints alleging workplace discrimination. This is the tip of the police department's iceberg – more lawsuits are expected.

The morale in the police department has been affected. Trust and communication between employees and department leadership have deteriorated.

Robberies and burglaries are up significantly since 2016 according to the City's own website.

Something is seriously wrong in our City when taxpayer funds are spent to hire Harvey Weinstein's PR defender to explain why millions of dollars are being paid out in lawsuits against the City.

Instead of paying outside law firms and spin masters, the city needs transparency. Defending lawsuits is not a strategy.

Our leaders need to examine the problems in our police department — and fix them!

Spagnoli Responds to Allegations, New 'BHPD Crisis' Site

Beverly Hills Police Chief Sandra Spagnoli finally broke her silence related to the allegations levied against her by current and former department employees last week following the drop of an anonymously-run website that claims the police department is "suffering from a disastrous leadership crisis and critically low morale."

In the video, taped against a white background, Spagnoli addresses the "greater Beverly Hills community" directly and cites a decrease in crime citywide as evidence that the allegations are simply "misrepresentations." She also claims her status as a woman in the law enforcement profession and in an environment "where change is not welcome by some" has made her work experience in Beverly Hills much more challenging.

"While I am not able to discuss the specifics of the cases or accusations against me, I think it's time to set the record straight. As the men and women of our Police Department put their lives on the line each and every day, it is very difficult to standby and listen to the egregious statements and misrepresentations that have been made," Spagnoli said before noting she was hired to change the culture of the department, particularly in regard to accountability, staffing and morale.

"As a recent independent review of our Police Department confirms, we are on the right track. There is not a crisis in the Beverly Hills Police Department, the morale of the department is strong and our new crime prevention techniques are making a difference. We are proud to report crime was down in 2018," she continued in the video, which can be viewed online at https://vimeo.com/312017860.

In a similar statement published in the Beverly Hills Courier, Mayor Julian Gold called the allegations against Spagnoli "inaccurate, mean-spirited and unfortunate" before reiterating, as Spagnoli did in the released video, what she was hired to do.

"She was hired to make change, period," Gold said. "Just this week, the Council received a report indicating the good work which is being done reflected in a declining crime rate. The chief and her team have successfully implemented recommendations from the independent firm, Management Partners. This was her mandate."

While both Gold and Spagnoli's claims about declining crime rates and the implementation of Management Partners recommendations are true (See page 4, "Overall Crime Rate Down in Beverly Hills"), they do not address the actual claims levied by the BHPD Crisis group directly as those allegations are not related to Chief Spagnoli's ability to carry out job tasks. Rather, the website focuses on allegations of workplace discrimination and concern about the City's continued defense of Spagnoli in light of the extreme claims against her.

"Twenty-two employees of our Beverly Hills Police Department have filed lawsuits or made complaints against the current Chief of Police Sandra Spagnoli and the City of Beverly Hills. The claims are coming from employees, police officers and civilians, of all races, religions, ranks, ages and sexual orientation. The troubling allegations include discrimination, retaliation sexual harassment and racial and religious slurs," the website reads. "They all allege the department and City did not take any or adequate action to address these issues."

These things, the BHPD Crisis website implies, could cause issues within the department, which may be the reason for Gold and Spagnoli's insistence that improvements are being made.

Attorney Bradley Gage, who represented former BHPD captain Mark Rosen in his lawsuit against the department, which was settled for $2.3 million, told the Weekly in response to the video that he thought it was "troubling that the department still does not recognize numerous inappropriate statements attributed to its leaders that have been confirmed by witnesses under oath in depositions."

"No one is above the law. Racism never promotes safety. Changing a culture to discriminate is not proper. The culture of the BHPD should be about fairness and protecting our community. If there is a culture of bigotry and prejudice it is dangerous to our community," Gage said. "If there are police officers who pull over a motorist simply because of the color of her skin, her age, or her religion, that poses significant risk. Racial slurs are bad for morale. If there is not fairness in the department because of one's sexual orientation, age, religion or national origin morale suffers. Safety plummets. The community demands safety and accountability. The police department should do what's right.'

Resident Vera Markowitz, who the Courier implied was speaking out about the allegations due to a "social relationship" with former BHPD captain Mark Rosen, said that accusation was false. In fact Markowitz said she had not socialized with Rosen before developing an interest in the allegations. She also said Rosen had never visited her home for dinner, which the Courier claimed.

"I find it very insulting. I haven't had people over for dinner for years because my husband is ill and can't come to the table. For them to even say that is very insulting," Markowitz said. "I started to speak out because when I was running [for City Council] one of the big things was that the new chief had come in. At that point it was time for her to appoint an assistant chief. I decided, because I ran a business all my life, to go to the Council and say it was a good idea to hire from within. I didn't have anyone in mind. I just thought it'd be good for learning the culture of the department. I didn't know her from Adam, so it wasn't because of any feelings I had toward her. At that point she chose to go after Rosen. She thought I was pushing for him because we are both Jewish, but that wasn't the case. I just thought it would be a good idea for someone to teach her the culture, but once those rumors started it made me interested in finding out why she was so angry. I called Rosen and he was surprised too. That was my start with all of this."

Markowitz also told the Weekly that she was not involved in the development and creation of the BHPD Crisis website. She did say, however, that she has since been asked to be the "face" of the group.

"I had no involvement in developing it, but people who were involved came to me. I told them I couldn't be involved but said I didn't mind being the face of it, being the person to buy the ads," Markowitz said. "I don't mind doing that. They pay me and I pay for them. I don't mind at all, but the fact is that I'm not behind it."

When asked if she would name the people behind the website and anonymously published newspaper ads (see ad page 2), Markowitz said: "There are a large number of people involved now. You'll see a list of names in a future ad."

Members of the BHPD Crisis group and other citizens concerned with the controversy ensnaring the police department are expected to speak out at the next City Council meeting on February 5.

Overall Crime Rate Down in Beverly Hills

The City of Beverly Hills saw a six percent decrease in overall crime from 2017 to 2018, according to a report from Beverly Hills Police Department (BHPD) Chief Sandra Spagnoli.

"Overall, crime is down six percent when you compare it to last year. Our property crime is down five percent. Our violent crime is down eleven percent," Spagnoli said during last Tuesday's City Council study session. "Our response times have improved by fourteen percent, from 2.8 minutes to 2.4 minutes on priority one calls. Our violent crime arrests are up 15 percent and our total arrests for the year are up 19 percent. In 2017 we had 1,587 arrests, but in 2018 we had 1,882 arrests."

BHPD has also added 47 new members to its ranks since 2016, which Spagnoli said directly impacted the decrease in crime across the city.

"These encouraging numbers reflect the impact of additional staffing and a commitment to geographical policing," Spagnoli said. "Officers are diligently patrolling the same neighborhoods and business districts every day and utilizing state-of-the-art technology to keep our city safe."

Specifically, property crime, including residential and commercial burglary, larceny and motor vehicle theft, saw the most significant decline in 2018. Chief Spagnoli said in a press release that she believed the newly implemented crime impact team was a contributing factor for these declines. That team is made up of officers sergeants who work directly with detectives to aggressively apprehend offenders and bring them to justice in timely manner. She also credited the strong collaboration with the community for the department's success. "The citizens are eves and ears within the neighborhoods," said Chief Spagnoliin a press release. "I encourage residents to continue to

Fine Art Commission Could Become Arts and Culture Commission

The Beverly Hills Fine Art Commission could soon be renamed the Arts and Culture Commission and given additional duties with the goal of promoting and nurturing the arts and cultural life in the city. According to a presentation at the commission's meeting last Thursday, the expanded powers of the commission, if approved, would include the ability to act in an advisory capacity to the City Council on matters pertaining to the "enrichment of the community through fine arts, visual arts, performing arts, digital arts, arts education, and community cultural activities and events.'

The possibility of expanding the commission's purview has long been a dream of the commission. Chair Zale Richard Rubins told the Weekly in Issue #984 that he was "very excited" about the idea of changing the purview of the commission so that we can make our focus a bit more broad, focusing on all types of art in the community and not just on what exists in our public parks," Rubins said. "If we're able to make that change, we will start having more discussions about how art relates to the community. Our focus would include music, dance, theatre, all types of art, in addition to what we currently do."

Though the expanded purview has not yet been approved by the City Council, it looks as if Rubins may check this priority off his list of to-dos as Chair.

According to the commission packet from January 17, the Arts and Culture Commission would serve as an advocate for cultural activities, community cultural programs and events within the city and promote arts and culture activities to broaden opportunities for residents and visitors to participate in the arts. It would also be responsible for implementing the city's public art program, fostering public and private partnerships for providing arts and cultural programming, promoting access to the highest quality arts opportunities possible, encouraging the integration of cultural programs and community cultural events into the fabric of the city, and encouraging and supporting art education programs in the community and schools.

The former Hamilton actress discusses her latest role as Joy in the documentary musical Witness Uganda, set to open at The Wallis Annenberg Center for Performing Arts on Tuesday, February 5.

What's it like performing at The Wallis and in Beverly Hills?

It's quite lovely. The venue is gorgeous. It's such a pretty campus. I was actually here last year doing Hamilton and we did a workshop with Witness Uganda at The Wallis. So, it feels like coming home. After being in New York, it's fun to come out and see palm trees. It's the best time of year to avoid New York and get some sunshine.

Witness Uganda is a documentary musical. How is that different from other shows that you've been in? How is the preparation for a documentary musical different?

I think the way it is being staged is the biggest difference. It's cinematic in a way. There are moments when you're watching someone on the stage and they're watching another scene that is also happening on stage. That's really common in film, but it's much harder to stage in the theatre. We can't use cutaways and flashbacks like you can with film. So, it's very cool. Watching the actors and our director shape and mold that on stage is really fascinating. It's also really amazing to be working with Matt and Griffin who lived the story. It's rare that you get to ask questions and pull from the true experience to create something like this because many times the show writer isn't there or maybe they've passed on, especially if you're doing an older show. So, it's really cool.

You played Peggy Schuyler and Maria Reynolds for a year as part of the national tour for the 11-time Tony Award-winning smash hit "HAMIL-TON." What was that experience like?

It is a giant of a show. The scale of the stage, the double turntables, all the costuming and everything, it's huge. It's a big undertaking. It was a great time and a great task, but I'm so glad to have been a part of it. To be able to tour California and see San Francisco and Los Angeles was awesome. I had a great time doing Hamilton.

You're a founding member of the Broadway Advocacy Coalition and vou sit on the coalition's Board of Directors. Tell us a little bit about what that is and how it got started.

In 2016 I was doing a show on Broadway called Shuffle Along. At the time it was at the height of so many black being murdered by police in America. I tried to see if Broadway was doing anything because that was also around the time of the Pulse nightclub shooting and there was an event happening for that, which was great, but it made me realize that we hadn't done anything as artists to show our support for Black Lives Matter. I called up some of my friends and within two weeks we put together a Broadway for Black Lives Matter event. It was an opportunity for us to come together, cry together, scream and rage, but also to learn from each other and become better citizens. We learned how to be one with our community. It was more than just a concert. We had community activists, community leaders, politicians and NYPD officers coming in to talk to us so we could understand our rights and what we can do if we are ever in a situation where we need to advocate for those rights. We can't fix everything in a day, but it was about learning to do small things each day to make the world a better place. That then turned into the used it to really showcase the full breadth advocacy coalition. We saw the need for it was there. Our mission is to bridge the ple and changing people with something gap between activism and artistry. It's something I didn't know would happen in my life or that I needed in my life, but it has turned into one of my greatest joys. It makes me feel that I'm doing my part. I'm doing more to make change than just voting every four years.

I mentioned that you were in Hamilton, but you've also been in RENT, Little Shop of Horrors, Stick Fly, Soul Doctor, and many other shows. Which performance would you say you are most proud of?

The thing I'm most proud of is the one-woman show that I wrote and produced. I debuted it here in LA. I got to transform the performance space and had amazing help with the arrangements without which I never could have done it. I think the reason I'm so proud of it is that when you're an artist, you're kind of at the beck and call to be part of it, I said absolutely. of your agent. You wait on them to see what theatres are producing and most of the time that determines if you work or if you don't. So, I decided last year that I wanted to have more power and control over my life. I wrote my own show and of my talents and abilities. Moving peothat you created is an amazing experience.

"It's really amazing to be working with Matt and Griffin who lived the story. It's rare that you get to ask questions and pull from the true experience to create something like this because many times the show writer isn't there or maybe they've passed on, especially if you're doing an older show."

-Amber Iman

Back to Witness Uganda -- what first interested you about the show?

I first auditioned back in 2013 and wasn't cast at the time, but I formed a friendship and bond with Matt [Gould] and Griffin [Matthews]. I had worked on their shows in the past and I did a workshop of Witness Uganda when it was still called Invisible Thread. I did another workshop of it last year. What I've always loved about it is that it's a black man telling his own story, with his own words. The fact that he went to Uganda and has been able to come back and take control of his own narrative is incredible. It's difficult to do that. They're both people I love and adore. Matt's music is outstanding. It spoke to me. The storytelling and the artistry are magical. When they asked me

Witness Uganda will run through Saturday, February 23. Tickets are $50 and can be purchased online at TheWallis. org/Witness or at the box office, located at 9390 North Santa Monica Boulevard.

This would be a major shift for the commission, which historically has dealt with fine art only.

Commissioner Michael Smooke guestioned whether, with these added responsibilities, additional commissioners would be added to ensure all duties were well managed.

"We're having enough trouble keeping up with what we have on our plate as it is," Smooke said.

"The staff will be responsible for implementing whatever comes out of the expansion," Assistant Director of Community Services Pam Shinault said. "So, to your point, there may be resource requests and you'd have staff to support those expansions."

Rubins then asked if it might be possible for ex-commissioners to volunteer and work with staff to offset some of the additional work that would come from an expanded version of the commission, noting that the library often has volunteers that assist with work and projects.

"The city has a citywide volunteer program that is under the Recreation and Parks section of the Community Services Department, so working through that program we might be able to do some of that," Shinault said. "In the case of the library, they have a 'Friends of' group that not only fundraises, but also does a lot of work in the library. They run the bookstore so that we don't have to do that and the proceeds help keep funding going for the library."

The commission suggested having a docent program group that did something similar. Shinault said that would be a possibility moving forward.

Next steps, Shinault said, will include presenting the draft ordinance to expand the commission's purview to the Recreation and Parks Commission and then convene a liaison meeting to get further direction on whether the ordinance should go to the City Council or not.

Two New Local Landmarks Added to Beverly Hills Register of Historic Properties

The City Council voted last Tuesday to formally place two new properties on the Beverly Hills Register of Historic Properties, the Wilshire-Rexford Office Building located at 9300 Wilshire Boulevard and the David O. Selznick Residence at 1050 Summit Drive. The addition of the 9300 Wilshire Boulevard two landmarks brings the total number of properties on the register to 42.

The Wilshire-Rexford Office Building was originally built in 1963 by the Twaits-Wittenburg Company and designed by Sidney Eisenshtat on behalf of the property's owner, 9300 Wilshire Corporation. Eisenshtat worked for noted Beverly Hills architect Arthur Froehlich and grew to be a prolific local architect of the Modern Era. Some of his other notable works in Beverly Hills include the Union Bank commercial building at the southwest corner of Wilshire Boulevard and South Beverly Drive, Temple Emanuel and associated school at 8844 Burton Way, and the Friar's Club which sat at 9900 Santa Monica Boulevard until it was demolished in 2011. Both Eisenshtat and Froehlich are named on the City's list of

According to the staff report for Tuesday night's Council meeting, "the 65,000 square foot, six-story building was one of the earlier commercial structures to transform the Beverly Hills skyline and the Wilshire Boulevard corridor in the late 1960s." This combined with Eisenshtat's involvement and the many character-defining features of the building, including bronze colored aluminum frame windows and a grid-like screen wall, qualified the property for eligibility as a local landmark.

The property was recommended for historic designation through a unanimous vote of the Cultural Heritage Commission on October 1, 2018. The 1050 Summit Drive estate was designed by Roland E. Coate, another of the City's Master Architects, and built by Thomas E. Sellers in 1933-1935 for famed Hollywood filmmaker David O. Selznick, best known for producing "Gone with the Wind" and "Rebecca."

Selznick actually produced "Gone with the Wind" while in residence at the Summit Drive estate. The home, which features a prominent central pavilion with a circular decorative hand-wrought metal canopy over the front door and a classically-inspired pedimented front gable above the second story, also appeared in numerous publications shortly after it was constructed, including Architectural Digest, California Arts and Architecture, and Architectural Record.

As with the Wilshire-Rexford Office Building, the Selznick estate was recommended unanimously for historic designation by the Cultural Heritage Commission.

Like the Cultural Heritage Commission, the Council expressed its full support for dubbing the two properties local landmarks, voting unanimously to support the decision.

"I can't enthusiastically say yes enough. I want to thank the owners of these beautiful, beautiful properties and thank the commission. I know we're at 42, but these two are very special," Councilmember Lili Bosse said.

Traffic and Parking Commission Chair Jay Solnit Shares Plan for Battling Traffic Congestion

By Kelcey Caulder

What first sparked your interest in local government?

I had been volunteering with my dental profession for a long time and decided to continue giving. Beverly Hills seemed like the best place to do it. I was on the Little League board for six years and then my wife and I did Team Beverly Hills. After that, I became interested in being a commissioner. My wife Lanna encouraged me to do it and I was lucky enough to be placed on the Traffic and Parking Commission.

What attracted you most to the Traffic and Parking Commission?

There were only two that I really wanted to be on, which were Traffic and Parking and the Recreation and Parks Commission. I was interested in traffic flow and could see how crowded things were and also had an interest in new methods of transportation, so it seemed like the best fit for me at the time.

Tell us about your educational background.

I started at Beverly Vista, went to Beverly High (Class of 1974), and then went to the University of Southern California for undergraduate school and then to USC again for dental school.

Tell us about your family.

I grew up in Beverly Hills. My dad was a prominent dentist in the city. My brother Gary is a well-respected prosthodontist in the city now. So, I come from a prominent dental family. My wife Lanna, who I've been married to for 23 years, has been in the advertising business for many years. I have 2 kids, named Matthew and Rachel. Matthew is 23 and Rachel is 20. Matthew just graduated with a business degree from the University of Arizona and is still trying to decide what he wants to do. Rachel is 20 and is a gender studies major. She wants to be a dietician.

What projects are coming down the pipeline for Traffic and Parking?

We just started Complete Streets, which will revamp a bunch of things in the city from crosswalks and bicycle routes to traffic flow. We've had workshops with residents about the Complete Streets Plan recently, and I think it's something that will take up a lot of our time over the next couple of years. We are also trying to consolidate parking permits in the City, which is something we've been working on for a while now. We currently have 73 parking zones. We want to consolidate those so it's easier to enforce regulations and so that there are more open, available spots for parking. Those are the two big ones right now. Metro is coming through as well, so we will be staying up to date on that. We just finished the Santa Monica project too.

What are your top three priorities as Chair of the commission?

I would like to get as many things completed within Complete Streets as possible. So, my top three would probably be putting in more or improving bicycle routes in the city and really anything that gets people out of their cars, out of traffic, and trying out new modes of travel. I'm also interested in pedestrian safety, so I'd like to do as many improvements to the crosswalks as we can. Traffic flow is important to me as well, as is preferential parking. That's a big priority. Of course, I'll also be looking at anything having to do with the abuse of handicap permits. That's something that I personally care about very much, so anything we can do as a commission related to that I would love

The commission is currently working on the Complete Streets Plan. What infrastructure projects would you most like to see included in that plan?

We're just in the process now of getting the report done for the City, so I'm not sure the exact time frame. We've had some workshops with residents and last month we had a study session that was completely on Complete Streets. We had a facilitator and residents came in, so right now we're completing that report. From there we'll implement as much as we can. We all came up with priorities, which are basically the same as what I > was saying. I don't know exactly when it will be done yet.

Traffic and parking enforcement has been a big topic over the last year with the commission. How do you plan to make enforcing parking regulations easier citywide?

We had a problem initially with the work we are doing with preferential parking because we weren't getting the number of responses from residents that we were hoping for and it became hard to make a legitimate finding. So, we have to find a way to reach the residents that works. There's a survey going out soon and we're looking at a couple of different ways that we can try to do outreach as well. We are hoping, though, that everything proceeds the way it has been, district by district. It's a project that has been taken on in the past and failed, so we're trying it again. It's a hard one to tackle and so far the City Council has sort of shot us down. So now, we're trying to get more resident involvement so we can get some more realistic supporting data to help us.

You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property.
