Wunderlich Returns from India

Councilmember Robert Wunderlich returned from a trip to India last week and shared his experience travelling overseas amid the coronavirus outbreak with the Weekly.

Wunderlich went on a trip to Udaipur,

Councilmember Robert Wunderlich and Andrea Spatz

India with his wife, Andrea Spatz, for approximately 20 days. He said the airport was hectic, with long lines and stressed people waiting to fly home. Originally set to change planes in Korea, which is considered a coronavirus hotspot, Wunderlich and his wife were able to change their route to pass through Newark airport instead Wunderlich said that once they arrived at the U.S. airport, they were not screened for the virus or asked to quarantine themselves.

"In India, we were frequently asked about where we had been and we frequently had our temperature monitored," Wunderlich said. "When we got to Newark, it was odd that we were not screened at all."

Wunderlich said that perhaps airports haven't implemented precautions yet or won't be, but that the absence of them was unexpected. In India, hotels had taken their temperatures and asked them to fill out health questionnaires prior to checking in.

"We received no instructions upon arrival with Newark, there was no screening, there was no asking us anything," Wunderlich said. "It was surprising to us."

He added that it was interesting to notice many people wearing face masks in Indian airports, while not many were wearing them in U.S. airports.

Wunderlich attended the City Council's emergency public session meeting Monday remotely over phone call. He said neither he or his wife are experiencing coronavirus symptoms, but are taking precautions by keeping themselves separated from others.

"I think these are unusual tribes, a national emergency has been declared. I don't think there's ever been a national emergency declared in my lifetime,"

Wunderlich said. "I think it is appropriate for us to select [mitigating the virus] to be our focus for now."

BHUSD Board Considers Policy on Social Media Use

The BHUSD Board of Education debated establishing protocols for social media use that could restrict what members can post on their personal accounts Tuesday.

Board President Isabel Hacker brought forward a policy draft that was originally shared with the board in October 2019. It listed suggested restrictions for what board members can post, which included sharing personal stances on issues that differ from the board majority's stance.

The majority of board members were in favor of a policy, including Hacker, Board Vice President Rachelle Marcus and Board members Noah Margo and Mel Spitz. Board member Tristen Walker-Shuman was opposed to a policy and said that it would be a violation of the first amendment.

The board will consider a policy at a later time and possibly discuss it in a future study session.

Hacker said she'd like to adopt a board policy because it doesn't currently exist.

"I hope that it would be the hope of the board that we continue to adopt a policy and a framework that will structure discipline and guidelines for any board member now or in the future to follow," Hacker said. "So that we have a recourse for an understanding [on] how we handle ourselves outside of this dias and when we're deliberating on social media."

Margo said that he thinks it's critical for elected officials to use social media responsibly, whether they work within the board of education or in Washington D.C.

"I can't support policy that will censor people [but] I will support policy that makes positive recommendations on how platforms should be used," Margo said. "It's a new time, social media is not going away, we have to adapt to it.'

He added that the board could possibly consider establishing separate personal and professional social media accounts.

Walker-Shuman said she questions why someone would try to limit the ability for anyone to communicate via social media.

"You can't claim to value transparency and at the same time limit the modern methods of communication that millions of Americans utilize - thousands in our community, "Walker-Shuman said.

Walker-Shuman said that she does not support a social media policy because she has freedom of speech and thinks social media is a valuable tool.

"Board policy does not trump law. As one board member, I do not support restriction of any kind. I believe social media use should continue to be embraced," Walker-Shuman said. "I will continue to be accessible and have open communication with the community via social media in a public and transparent manner."

Hacker, Marcus and Spitz disputed Walker-Shuman's stance. Hacker said that a policy would not be censorship, but establish a protocol that would make the board more functional.

"What I will not standby is to have a board member in this dias who refuses to be a board member, who will not abide by the rules and guidelines that the four of us or five of us agree to," Hacker said. "I think that seems to be inconsistent with good governance."

Walker-Shuman said that there are policies that board members do not abide by, including the Brown Act. She said that board members have admitted to violating and cited an instance where Spitz shared with her that he had discussed board member stances on agenda items without the entire board present.

"I've used Facebook since 2008, I've also used Instagram, What's App and Twitter – this is the way communication is done," Walker-Shuman said. "For better or worse, it is protected under the First Amendment."

The Man Behind LVMH

Bernard Arnault, the Chairman and CEO of LVMH Moelt Hennessy Louis Vuitton, is the business magnate behind the future luxury hotel and retail store that's planned for Rodeo Drive in 2025.

Arnault's corporation already owns several businesses on Rodeo Drive, including Louis Vuitton, Fendi and Sephora. In five years it will add Cheval Blanc Beverly Hills, a luxury hotel with retail stores and restaurants on its first floor, to its list of properties in Beverly Hills.

LVMH owns Christian Dior, Givenchy,

Bernard Arnault

nies that sell luxury items. Arnault is the richest person in the fashion industry and has a net worth of $97.7 billion, according to Bloomberg. He is the third richest person in the world and was briefly the richest person in the world in 2019.

Celine and 67

other compa-

Arnault was born in Roubaix, France and received his degree from Ecole Polytechnique. His first job was as an engineer for his family's construction company, Ferret-Savinel. He was eventually promoted to Chairman in 1978, surpassing his father's position. Under his direction, his family's company shifted from construction to real estate investment.

He later became CEO of Financiere Agache, a luxury goods company, and also acquired the textile company Boussac Saint-Frères in 1984. He sold all of the latter company's assets, except Christian Dior and Le Bon Marche department

According to LVMH's website, Arnault became the majority shareholder and Chairman of LVMH Moet Hennessy Louis Vuition in 1989. He is married to Helene Mercier and has five children, who also work within his corporation.

Public Works Considers Ficus Tree Removal

The Public Works Commission considered a petition to replace Ficus trees on the 100 block of Robertson Boulevard, which was created due to sidewalk damage, at its Thursday meeting.

Residents on the 100 block of Robertson Boulevard created a petition to replace 15 Ficus trees on the street with alternative planting, such as Mexican Fan Palm and Crape Myrtle trees. There are a total of 104 Ficus trees on the entire street.

The Commission supported the request, which the city council will take into consideration when it reviews the petition in its upcoming meeting. The next council meeting is currently scheduled for March

The total cost for removing and replanting the 15 trees would be $45,000. The cost of removal is $20,000, while replanting is $25,000. The city would use existing funds from the Street Tree Master Plan program for the project.

Homeowners and business owners had previously attempted to petition for removal of Ficus trees on Robertson Boulevard in 2014-2015. However it failed to move forward, because it didn't have the required majority resident support.

Horace Mann School later had to replace six Ficus trees on Robertson Boulevard for its subterranean parking structure renovation and replaced them with Mexican Fan Palm and Crape Myrtle trees. In response, an increased number of residents and business owners grew to be in favor of replacing the trees with the same ones the school had chosen.

Property owners brought the issue forward to the city again in 2017. In that same year, the city repaired root-displaced sidewalks and removed 13 Ficus trees from a portion of Robertson Boulevard.

Overall, 20 of 104 Ficus trees on Robertson Boulevard have been removed.

Commission Debates Water Conservation Policy

The Public Works Commission considered a proposal for incentivising water conservation, which would be adopted into the city's water conservation plan, in its Thursday meeting.

The proposal was an amendment to the city's excessive water use policy that would require residents to reduce their water usage if they don't want the cost of their water bill to increase.

How much residents must reduce is determined by class, instance for multi family residences will be expected to reduce water use by 3% while 1006 Pamela Drive commercial buildings must reduce by 11%. Commissioners said that the proposal needs more clarity before they can approve it. It recommended that an Ad Hoc Committee of Vice Chair Charles Alpert and Commissioner Sandra Aronberg review the proposal once more before it considers it again in a later meeting.

Alpert said he's currently not in favor of adopting the proposed amendments to the city's water regulations because its numbers are unclear and might not incentivise residents enough to work

"I don't know if I'm really in favor of this, because if you're affluent you'll just pay the surcharge," Alpert said.

Alpert said that the language of the proposal is also unclear, such as one portion that said single family residences will reduce 6% of their water consumption but doesn't say where the 6% would be calculated from. He added the plan should state reductions are based on state mandated requirements.

Commissioner Jerry Felsenthal also said he was apprehensive with the proposal. He said that it would be unfair for certain families to reduce their water usage while others won't be motivated by the fee to change their habits.

"The idea that someone who is affluent can do whatever they want to, kind of flies in the face of what we want to achieve in a way," Felsenthal said.

The proposal had already gone through a Public Works subcommittee once in January 2019. The subcommittee requested that the article adopt a baseline year for water consumption reductions and revenue stabilization factors not replace penalty surcharge for overuse.

Public Works Director Shana Epstein said that this is a policy that would be put in place regardless of if there's a water

"The water shortage stabilization rates is when we ask people to conserve, we are assuming people are going to do the right thing," Epstein said.

The Commission will deliberate on including these updates in the Emergency Water Conservation Plan in a month, after the Ad Hoc Committee is finished reviewing it again.

Planning Commission Reviews Construction Disagreement

The Planning Commission mediated a neighborhood dispute about construction on a Pamela Drive home last Thursday.

The commission approved an R-1 permit for the construction of a new home on Pamela Drive in 2017, which was required to commence before it expired on February 10. In order to extend the permit on the day it was set to expire, the homeowner excavated two holes on the property to qualify as construction.

Neighbors later objected to this decision and filed an appeal against the city's approval of the project. City council will consider the issue in its next meeting. The Planning Commission did not deliberate on the matter, but provided advice to the homeowner and neighbors.

The neighbors raised concerns to the Commission regarding the project's compliance to city ordinances, the commission's conditions, and its impact on the neighborhood. They had previously raised concerns to the Commission in its February 27th meeting, during public comment.

Alfred Checchi, the former CEO of Northwest Airlines, who lives near the project, said that the commission's choice to not make a decision on the appeal is a decision to let the homeowner get away with ignoring city ordinances.

"No decision is a decision to approve the site plan unlike anything else in this city, [its] a gross departure from city norms and one I assure you the neighborhood does not accept," Checchi said. "It is also a decision to condone adverse impacts on adjacent properties [from] owners like ourselves.'

Checchi and his wife, Kathryn Checchi, hired a lawyer to represent them in their dispute. In a letter to the Director of Community Development Susan Healy Keene, their representing law firm said that the project's permit legally expired on February 10 and the excavation of two holes does not qualify as construction.

The letter also states that the project plan was misrepresented when it was first shown to the commission in 2017. It also said that the approved project plans were based on the expired 2019 California Building Codes and the applicant must submit a revised version to be up to date.

"These policies are the cornerstone of the approval process and the reason you even sit here to make judgments [is so] that policies are followed and the standards of the community are preserved," Checchi said. "Should Beverly Hills reward applicants who lie and grossly misrepresent the facts?"

Leonid Smirnov, the homeowner, said that the real issue is not the choice of shrubbery, which is one of the things neighbors have disputed, but that the Checchi's don't want construction on the street. He said it was Checchi's hope that his permit would expire and he was forced to act in a few short hours to keep it, which is why he dug the two holes.

The Commission recommended that the two groups put their differences aside and come to an agreement. Vice Chair Peter Ostroff said that they can choose to wait several years to come to a compromise and waste a lot of money, or do it now.

Checchi and Smirnov agreed to meet again to discuss how to move forward with the project that was fair to them both.

BEVERLY HILLS REACTS TO COVID-19

Residents, Businesses Respond To "New Normal"

By Ani Gasparyan

The coronavirus outbreak continues to spread throughout California, which led Beverly Hills to declare the pandemic a local emergency. As of Tuesday, there was at least one case of coronavirus in Beverly Hills.

City Manager George Chavez declared a local emergency Sunday in response to public safety concerns, which the City Council ratified in an emergency public session Monday. City Hall and non-essential retail stores will be closed to the public until further notice.

Other closures include Beverly Hills Public Library, La Cienega Tennis Center, Roxbury Park Tennis Courts and Greystone Mansion & Gardens. The BHUSD will be closed until April 5, with students beginning online instruction after spring break. Senior programs, the Sunday Farmers' Market and other city sponsored activities in March have also been canceled.

Beverly Hills Mayor John Mirisch said on Facebook that Beverly Hills will get through this period of time as a community.

"The safety of our residents, visitors and the employees who work in Beverly Hills is paramount and we need to take the highest level of preventive and precautionary measures in these extraordinary times," Mirisch said.

In its emergency session, councilmembers agreed to restrict restaurants to take-out only, establish a moratorium on evictions for non-payment of rent from people affected by the virus, temporarily suspend utility shut offs due to the virus and temporarily suspend certain parking regulations.

The council also established which stores are essential to remain open, such as mechanics, pet-supply stores, laundromats and the like. Non-essential stores will be required to close, such as spas, clothing stores and so forth.

The Health and Safety Commission also held an emergency meeting last Thursday to ease community concerns about the virus and communicate the city's next steps.

"We haved moved from containment to mitigation," Chair Daniel Nazarian said. "We can't stop it, but we can reduce the risk."

Fire Chief Gregory Barton said in the meeting that the city is ready to expand its local response and emergency management protocols to ensure a coordinated approach if it becomes necessary. The fire department will collaborate with other Westside cities in the case of an emergency.

Public Information Manager Keith Sterling said the community can access updates by going on beverlyhills.org/novelcoronavirus.

"So much of this is outreach and communication," Sterling said. "In a situation like this, I know from speaking with my colleagues, there's never enough."

BHUSD Superintendent Michael Bregy also attended the meeting. Bregy said that the district is fortunate to be on Spring Break, which will give it time to assess how to handle the situation.

"Any information that comes in about a student or parent visiting some place, we're doing a lot of investigating," Bregy said. "Even if it's hearsay, because we want to make sure [the coronavirus] is — not coming back to our school environment."

Since the meeting, however, the BHU-SD Board of Education held an emergency meeting in which they decided to cancel classes throughout the district to prevent the virus from spreading.

"We are aware of the impact that will be felt as a result of these closures and want to further reiterate how committed we are to everyone remaining healthy during this time," said Jenny Rogers, Director of Community Services.

Los Angeles County recently reported its first death from coronavirus, otherwise known as COVID-19. The deceased was an older adult who recently had a long layover in South Korea, according to the county.

The total number of cases in Los Angeles County is 94 as of Tuesday. There are approximately 392 confirmed coronavirus cases in California and 11 deaths as of press time.

Rev. Janet Broderick from Beverly Hills' All Saints Episcopal Church was tested positive for the virus and is currently undergoing treatment, according to the Los Angeles Times

According to the Center for Disease

Control, the virus spreads when in close proximity to an infected person and through respiratory droplets from when an infected person coughs or sneezes. Known symptoms include coughing, fever and shortness of breath.

"The safety of our residents, visitors and the employees who work in Beverly Hills is paramount and we need to take the highest level of preventive and precautionary measures in these extraordinary times—Mayor John Mirisch

LVMH BRING LUXURY

Luxury Hotel Coming to Rodeo Drive

By Ani Gasparyan

LVMH Moet Hennessy Louis Vuitton, a French multinational corporation that specializes in luxury goods, plans to establish a luxury hotel, restaurant and retail project on Rodeo Drive in 2025.

LVMH, known for owning brands like Louis Vuitton and Christian Dior, submitted development plans to open Cheval Blanc Beverly Hills in the city. It plans to build a 115 guestroom hotel with rooftop pools, a private club and penthouse. The first floor will be made up of LVMH retail establishments and restaurants.

This will be the first Cheval Blanc to open in the United States. Other prop-ry brand conglomerate already owns or leases 18 properties in Beverly Hills. Most recently, it bought out the lease for the Paley Center in order to later construct the project.

Peter Marino, who received the Excellence in Design Award from the Beverly Hills Architectural Commission in 2015, will be architect for the project. He has previously designed the Louis Vuitton, Fendi and Christian Dior stores, which are all owned by LVMH, on Rodeo Drive

Beverly Hills' Gruen Associations will be collaborating with Marino on the design

Bernard Arnault, Chairman and CEO of LVMH, said that his company has been in a longstanding presence on Rodeo Drive and he looks forward to expanding its role in the city.

Former mayors Tom Levyn, Linda Briskman and Barry Brucker are working on the project.
